Those who would like their Indiana library job posting to be listed in the Wednesday Word must submit the position and its description to the growth of telehealth and telemedicine visits continuing beyond the COVID-19 pandemic, individuals are finding more ways to reach their healthcare providers.

However, in rural areas, finding local providers and reliable internet access can create a barrier to access. As public libraries have long been viewed as the central hub for information, gatherings and broadband service, their pivot to serve as a place for patrons to meet virtually with social workers comes at an opportune time. This presentation will show how three public libraries developed a pilot program - titled "Because You Matter" - with the Indiana University School of Social Work to coordinate weekly telehealth visits with social work students and library patrons. They'll share successes, failures and what they learned to improve the program in the future.

Presenters include Stephanie Rawlins, director of the Pike County Public Library; Jordan Orwig, director of the Sullivan County Public Library; and Nathan Watson, director of the Bedford Public Library.

The presentation is eligible for one LEU for Indiana library staff. Click here to read more and click here to register.

environment of the Indianapolis Public School system are now available to view on The Indianapolis Public Library's Digital Indy website.

The Indianapolis Public Schools Architecture Collection is the newest addition to the Library's Digital Indy archive, which includes collections of documents, images, videos and recordings that highlight local history. Digital Indy's content may be printed or downloaded free for personal use, study or research.

The Indianapolis Public Schools Architecture Collection spans three centuries and includes documents from the 1890s through the 1970s. The educational priorities of various time periods are reflected in the design of buildings and how they were used. For example, school floor plans that highlight what was taught in classrooms during various time periods reveal rooms designated for clothing laboratory, cabinet making shop and other subjects that are hard to find in modern schools.

“The architecture depicted in this collection is the physical manifestation of the complicated history of the IPS school system at large,” said Indianapolis Public Library’s digital projects coordinator Katie Farmer. “The priorities of society and culture are reflected in how the educational system developed and evolved, and images of a coal storage room inside of a school can show how the technical aspects of the buildings have changed over the decades.”

The collection has been preserved in large part due to the IPS Facilities Management Division and will continue to be stored on IPS grounds. The digitization of these materials was made possible

The Indianapolis Foundation and local donors established this endowed fund in 1999 as a tribute to Minde Glenn Browning, the former assistant director at the IU School of Law - Indianapolis Law Library and chair of the Library Fund Steering Committee.

Grants may be used to cover the cost of registration, materials, travel and lodging to attend professional conferences and workshops, professional coursework, leadership development programs and group programs related to libraries, media centers, etc.

'Philosophy and Children's Literature' webinar set for Oct. 25

On Tuesday, Oct. 25, the Indiana State Library will present "Philosophy and Children's Literature" from 2-3 p.m. via Zoom.

Children's literature is full of philosophical questions and ideas, reflecting an awareness of children's propensities to think about life's big questions. The session will explore ways to inspire exploration with children about their big questions through children's books. Presenter Jana Mohr Lone will examine several examples of philosophically-suggestive works, and will engage the group in a philosophical inquiry based on a picture book. Attendees will come away with ideas and resources for involving children in
