

INDIANA DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION

Brandye Hendrickson Commissioner

Brandye L. Hendrickson was appointed Commissioner of the Indiana Department of Transportation (INDOT) on April 22, 2015 by Governor Mike Pence.

As leader of INDOT, Hendrickson oversees all aspects of one of the state's largest agencies. INDOT employs over 3,400 people and is responsible for a state highway system that includes over 28,400 total roadway lane miles and 5,300 bridges. INDOT has a $400 million annual operating budget and an annual construction budget in excess of $1 billion.

Hendrickson has more than 16 years of progressively responsible business experience, including more than 10 years at executive level. She has a proven record of success in a variety of challenging roles including both Human Resources and Operations and a strong ability to drive results, identify opportunities for process improvement and efficiency, and assemble and develop teams to deliver quality outcomes.

From 2007-2015, Hendrickson served as Deputy Commissioner of INDOT's Greenfield District, which is the largest transportation district in Indiana. In this role, she managed an annual construction budget of approximately $250 million and an annual operating budget of $48 million. Hendrickson oversaw a workforce of approximately 400 employees, who were responsible for the planning, design, construction, maintenance and operation of INDOT's transportation infrastructure within the district.

From 2006-2007, Hendrickson served as Deputy Commissioner and Director of Human resources at INDOT. Her responsibilities included strategic planning and directing all Human Resources functions for 4,500 state employees as a member of INDOT's executive staff.

Hendrickson holds a Bachelor of Arts from Indiana University. In 2001, she achieved Professional in Human Resources (PHR) certification from the Human Resources Certification Institute-Society for Human Resources Management.
