

Proposed Property Exchange between Snellenberger and Indiana Department of Natural Resources at Greene-Sullivan State Forest

In the proposed Snellenberger exchange, Mr. and Mrs. Snellenberger and the Indiana Department of Natural Resources would exchange deeds that would essentially shift the Snellenberger property lines about 400 feet west of their current location. This would correct an encroachment situation where a large pole building and some yard encroached onto property that was deeded to the IDNR by a coal company. The encroachment was not caused by the current owners as they only recently purchased the property. But it was during the sale of this property that the encroachment issue was discovered. The exchange will not change the acreage of either ownership. This is in Sullivan County along SR 54 between Sullivan and Dugger, Indiana. The Snellenbergers would end up losing a large ag field which would go to IDNR. The property they would gain from IDNR is some yard area that has been used by prior owners, and reclaimed strip mine property that is largely planted to autumn olive and blacklocust.

The blue cross hatch shows the current configuration of the Snellenberger ownership with IDNR ownership lines in red.

This shows the proposed new configuration of the Snellenberger property in the blue cross hatch. IDNR property lines would then be shifted to match the revised Snellenberger configuration.
